HOW'S YOUR NOSE?

What lilacs are most fragrant?

Yes, we know all about S. pubescens; it's something super

-- but how about the French Hybrids and Early Hybrids? Which ones are tops? We just can't smell the more than 100 different varieties of Early and French Hybrids in our collection, all with scientific accuracy -- yet people are always asking, how about fragrance? Can you help us? Tell us what varieties smell the sweetest -- we'll appreciate the information -- and put it to good use -- but just remember -- lilacs are most fragrant after having been in bloom for several days -- keep this in mind when comparing early and later bloomers --

----- GOSSIPY BITS ABOUT BOUQUETS -----

"I prefer to leave my blooms on the bush" said almost all those who told us which lilac varieties they had found best for cutting...apparently you can't go too far wrong, though, if you snip your blossoms off Mme. F. Morel, Charles X, Charles Joly, Ellen Willmott, Pres. Grevy, Lucie Baltet, Victor Lemoine, Mme. Lemoine or Marie Le-graye.....Lilactime in Holland is in the middle of winter, according to the magazine, "The Dutch Grower" -- plants are brought into the warm greenhouses for forcing and blooms by the thousands are shipped to England and other countries -- in spring the bushes go back in the nursery, until the following winter -- some plants are reported to have survived this "double life" for twenty years.....
